FICTIONAL TRAINING REFERENCE – NOT A REAL JUDGMENT

Judgment B – Supplied Reference

Case: Beta Industries v. Tax Authority (Fictional)

Issue

Whether input tax credit should be sustained where the taxpayer cannot establish the required transaction and reconciliation evidence, even if the supplier's cancellation occurred after the invoice period.

Key reasoning

The fictional reference places greater emphasis on documentary evidence. It states that timing of cancellation alone does not resolve the dispute and that the taxpayer must be able to demonstrate the underlying transaction and satisfy the applicable documentary requirements.

Position / outcome

On the fictional facts, the claim was not sustained because the taxpayer could not provide sufficient supporting evidence for the disputed transactions.

Training caution

This is a fictional teaching reference created for prompt-comparison practice. It is not a legal authority and must not be cited in real work.
